BROWNIES

BY PALMER COX.

[From the Ladies' Home Journal.]

grave and Because it brings Thanksgiving Day, When those who have been scattered wide Assemble at the fireside To render thanks for being blessed, And have a dinner of the best. Thus spoke a little Brownie spry As that great day was drawing nigh. Another said: " And truth to tell.

Let some a southern course pursue, And some the north star keep in view; While others travel west and east To gather something for our feast. But let the work be understood That we may have a mixture good, Not overmuch of any dish, But such assortment as we wish. Let these who to the north proceed Procure the poultry we will need: Let those who turn their faces west Bring ples and puddings of the best; The southern band can put in place

The fruit that must our table grace; While those who on their mission run, an, as their part, if naught prevents,

Bring coffee, tea and condiments,

As if to meet the rising sun.

Is not from cunning Brownies free.

Said one, whose part it was to bear A brace of turkeys, as his share: That fowl has surely little wits Who, on a branch of cherry sits, That one can whittle off with ease While it still dreams of corn and peas, And can be carried from the spot A mile or two, and know it not. We'll not disturb the people here

In time, the rich supplies were found And carried to the trysting-ground: The poultry was not lacking there That fattened in the northern air. While others proved the fertile west Was rich in pastry of the best. The south soon yielded fruitage fine. From orchard, grove, and clinging vine. While quickly from the eastern land Return the nimble-footed band

Of ples and cakes of every style, And freely praised her skill the while It mattered not if tea was cold, Or coffee weak, or butter old. Or bread was close allied to dough, No fault was found, all had to go.

Time slips along howe'er we try

To check the hours passing by ; And even Brownies cannot stay The moments as they flit away; And though the nights were growing long.

Who, through some art or method strange,

We'll bear the roost and all its load,

Although no pumpkins on the vine For us like burnished gold may shine: Or turkeys gather at our call. To feed and fatten through the Fall. Be sure we have a way to find A dinner, if we're so inclined; We'll not go hungry, never tear; There's not a pantry, far or near, But we can reach and take a share Of things that are provided there; Naught will be missed, and that's where we Excel the human kind, you see. We magnify whate'er we choose. And thus the people nothing lose Now, into separate bands divide, And travel through the country wide;

To make our feast a grand affair." Now as directed, nothing slow, Away to every point they go,

Safe from the fox and kindred for By roosting in a friendly tree-

'Tis little use to tell a wife To guard the pantry, as her life: Or at the maid the engice to throw She must be watchful, or must go; Because the Brownies have a way To carry on their work or play; And what they want they soon receive Without so much as-" by your leave" But where they visit, there they bless, The household treasures grow no less; And happy is the home whose floor The Brownie band has scampered o'er. No want will ever pinch or squeeze The little ones who bend their knees Beside the bed where Brownies creep,

Or skip about while people sleep.

Without delay did entrance gain, And, as it happened, not in vain. It doesn't take the Brownies long to cook a fowl, if nothing's wrong, secause there is no bickering there For what is overdone or rare; wood is scarce, or slow to burn, The smoke will cook it to a turn, and, for a certain part or end About the fowl, they don't contendhe leg, the neck, or part that flaps, Whatever fills the hungry gaps
Will do—and thus, not hard to please. The Brownies gets through life in case ne feast that night was truly grand; Enough for all was there at hand : And when some seemed to be nigh through, They'd start again at something new:

and the right car of many a cook Was hot that night as they partool

Before the lively band was through. And from the banquet ground withdrew.

Supplies to gratity their taste;

They don't leave much to throw away. Though hot the soup may spatter round Before the waiting plate is found. And some may chance to get a scald Who have for something better called. They stay around the table still 'Till every one has had his fill.

ome birds commenced their morning song

It is not often Brownies take Upon themselves to boil and bake, Or gather up with wondrous haste But when they do 'tis sale to say

So, while some tested bread and pie But let it be a least or ride, n waiting for another night.

And cakes that well might draw the eye, And poured the tea and coffee hot In cupfuls from the boiling pot, Or gnawed the apples till they wore An inroad to the seedy core, And to the bones gave greatest care While still a shred of meat was there; Till there was nothing, high or low, Would yield fair picking for a crow, Some found a chance to turn their eyes

Those watchful Brownies danger saw, And urged their friends to quit the ground While they had strength to move around, Or else the sun would on them fall And make examples of them all.

In spite of hints or warning cries some lingered at the cakes and pies, still counting on the speed they'd make When they at last the road would take. But when the plates were clean, and they No longer on the spot could stay, They crossed the country in a hurry;

The lively Band was out of view Where every one could safely hide
